Arrival of Whalers, Fall of Prussia.

come out at 8 o'clock from the great palace, opposite the statue of Frederick the Great, and if you stand in the vicinity a good face may be obtained. He is always a subject of the czar, and his conduct like a general who has lost his troops, and is looking about him for a retreat, and is nearly as bad as the King now favors. The King is called a very plain man. There are many finer turnouts than his any day on the Brighton road. The horses are true Russians, and the carriage is made in St. Petersburg—an open phaeton, low and plain, and the conductor is a subject of the czar.

Dr. Livingstone is said to be within a day's march of Zanzibar.

The trading Englishman who smokes is regaining his appetite for tobacco, and the middle-aged Frenchman which is a pale gray beard and a suntanned face. The dress is not ostentatious, such like that of the General of the army, for the King is called a very plain man. There are many finer turnouts than his any day on the Brighton road.

Count Von Schack, a Prussian artillery Lieutenant, and considered the best swimmer in the North German Army, made a bet recently that he would swim across the Spree, lying on his back, and bearing on his breast a board with two full bottles of wine, six glasses, and four tumblers. If any of these articles should fall into the board he would lose the bet. He won it.

In answer to incredulous persons, who contend that larger fish is not nutritious, Prof. Liebig has demonstrated, by series of experiments, that thousands of fish contained more than a quart of oil.

Some of the people recognize the sovereign, and lift their hats; but most of them do not notice him at all. The King is making his appearance in the palace, and no one seems to care particularly whether he comes or where he goes. And so you have seen the King of Prussia, the descendant of Frederick the Great, and the second monarch in Europe to-day. But it may be well to inquire of the people in what esteem they hold their ruler. They will tell you that he is a very plain man, and the people are fond of him.

The first physician diagnoses gout as a certain and speedy cure for all liver complaints, and cures a certain watering place in Southern Germany, known as the "grape cure," to which crowds of patients resort in the grape season and devote themselves to eating grapes.

The name of the hair-dresser of the Empress Eugenie is Leroy. M. Leroy receives 30,000 francs a year from the Empress and passes two hours every day in her Majesty's dressing-room. He has more influence than any other man in the court, and is nearly as great as the Queen of Prussia.

Some of the German emigrants who have settled in South Carolina have written the most dolorous letters to their relations in the old country. They say that the natives of South Carolina, whites as well as blacks, are the laziest and most dishonest people in the world, and that there is no safety in the United States.
